Fred Grant.

Over the desk of the Secretary of the republican State committee, in their rooms in vigorating the system. the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York, hangs a life-size photograph. It is of the profile of a three bottles for $1.25. 1011111 g. Boots, Slices, good tooking man. The trow, lips and ching in a straight line and slightly inclined. The forehead is broad, even and hais and Gents Furnishings, a little low. The low effect is heightened so 55 by wearing the hair down, not in a bang, but brushed forward in a careless curve. The eyebrows are well marked, and the 4-96 The eyebrows are well marked, and the 5-10 eyes set back under them are large and brown. They are not fully opened, but the eyelids drop like a half-closed folding door, ready to be pushed back at once. The nose is straight and wide. The moustache is long and sweeping; the dark brown hair could be pulled back almost to the ear. It is evident that it is carefully brushed, oiled and $100 25 00 groomed. The mouth is more gentle than firm. It has pleasing curves and a ruddy fullness of the lips. The chin is square but 000 CHILDREN'S SUITS, ranging from $1 fullness of the lips. The chin is square but not ragged. It and the cheeks are covered with a full dark brown beard half an inch long, worn more for convenience in not shaving than on its own account, as the moustache is made the ornamental feature Pof the face.

The apparel is costly, easy fitting and shows neither good nor bad taste. It is money enough to buy good clothes and knew where to go to order them. The collar is moderately tall, as high as it be with comfort to a not long The ends are not bent over, but notched. A figured black satin scarf and a pearl in a gold star for a scarf pin, a silk laced frees coat and quiet trousers, the ordinary gard of a prosperous business man, are worn in this photograph.

There are other photographs around the oem, and each one has a name on it. This photograph has and needs one. Every one Grant, republican candidate for Secretary of State, will recognize at once that it is a faithful repetition of his features and dress. The only peculiarity in dress about Col. his inditofalways wearing black kid gloves. He weats them on the street. He keeps them on in his office till he must take them off to write. He wears them in a botel par-lor, in a reception room and when he was nominated at the republican convention at Suratoga, and was escorted down from his hotel to the convention in making his brief speech of thanks he were the black kid gloves still, and his solitary gesture was the waving of a black-kid gloved hand.

Cal Grant and his wife, who was former Honore, of Chicago, are making a cour of the State for votes. Senator His-cock and ex-Senator Miller are the oratorical attractions, but more people come to see Col. Grant than to hear the two Senators. Mrs Grant does not usually go to the meet-ings with her husband. She stays at the hotel or in the house of friends, and a reception is given where she receives the townsfolk. She is a charming, gracious woman and is making friends for her husband. The Secators and Col. Grant have visited Wells-ville, Jamestown, Fredonia and other country towns. At the end of their rural circuit they will go to New York, and at a mass meeting there Col. Grant will speak.

Col. Grant is no talker. It pains him to appear in public and he is embarrassed in even the shortest speech. He has not said over a hundred sentences in any one public speech; when he was nominated and escorted to the platform in the convention he atood sitent for some time, blushed, turned and looked from side to side of the hall, and murmured in a voice that could not be heard troubles him, but the diffidence and inabili-ty to feel at home and talk on a platform. Off the platform Col. Grant is not reticent. He talks well, readily and sensibly. He feels at ease in a chair and will chat away entertainingly for some time, but put him on his feet and his voice goes away with his thoughts. It has been the same way on his tour of the State. Either Senator Hiscock or ex-Senator Miller would open with a long speech on the i-sues of the campaign and the various bad things the democrats bad done, and the good things the republicans had done and were going to do. Col. Grant would wait until the cration was over. He would be introduced, would bow, would tell the people how glad he was to see them, what a prosperous and pleasing town and county they had, and that he would do nis duty if elected. This took a minute or two. There were cheers when he began, which had hardly finished when Oysters of the best quality received from Nerk daily and delivered in any part of the city.

Orders from the country solicited. Great care takes with the people. There are any number to packing. and talk permanently, but Col. Grant is the first one to make a tour of the State and say nothing, not because he isn't willing, but simply because he can't make a speech. Col. Grant makes a good impression percol. Grant makes a good impression personally. He isn't mighty and he isn't humble. He smokes good cigars, wears good clothes, has a pretty wife, a comfortable home, an easy, well fed look, and is the kind of man that nobody would expect enarkling brilliancy from but would expect NEW RAISINS, CURRANTS, PRESERVES

AND TH sparkling brilliancy from, but would prefer to have him in their houses or at their din ner tables to a man who might be an orator and the possessor of an extended intellect, but not able to handle a fork or hold a wine glass. He is going on in an amiable, pleasing way, making no enemies, for there is ing way, making no enemies, for there is nothing in nim to offend. He attacks nothing and rubs no fur the wrong way. Still he is by no means a magnetic man or popular hero. He has no knack of making friends. He has not those strong personal qualities which make warm friends and bit-ter enemics.

At the republican headquarters Col.

$4 00 Grant causes no trouble. He knows that
2 00 he is not a politician, and he asks for, and is glad to take, the advice of men who are. ticians in charge of the catopaign what they want to have him do, and when they tell him he goes and does it without questioning. -New York Letter
